STATE FLAGSHIP UNIVERSITIES

Usually a prominent research university with a large student body and vibrant college town atmosphere, with an emphasis on college sports such as American football.

In general, when people talk about “flagship” state universities, they are referring to the most prominent public research university in a particular state. These are very large universities, offering undergraduate to doctorate-level studies. They are generally located in a “college town,” where the life of the town or city revolves around the university. During the fall semester, weekend activities often include attending games for the university’s American football team.

U.S. UNIVERSITY TYPES & TERMINOLOGY

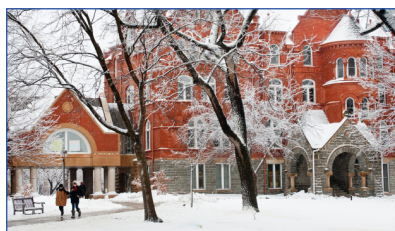

PRIVATE LIBERAL ARTS COLLEGES

Privately funded institutions with small class sizes and higher access to professors, with a focus on the undergraduate student experience.

Private colleges and universities do not receive direct funding from the state. Colleges only award undergraduate degrees, while universities also offer graduate programs. There is an emphasis on small class size, and it is rare to have a class larger than 40 students. At many smaller colleges, students can expect class sizes between 15-20 students. Smaller class sizes mean that students have a high level of access to their professors.

HISTORICALLY BLACK COLLEGES & UNIVERSITIES (HBCUs)

Institutions established to educate Black Americans; open to students of all races.

Located primarily in the Southern U.S., Historically Black Colleges and Universities (HBCUs) are institutions of higher education in the United States that were established before the U.S. Civil Rights Act of 1964 abolished legal racial segregation in the U.S. The principal mission of HBCUs was and is the education of Black Americans. All students are encouraged to include our HBCU members on their ISEP Exchange applications! HBCUs offer all students, regardless of race, an opportunity to develop their skills and talents. Although HBCUs were originally founded to educate primarily Black students, their diversity has increased over time – in 2017, non-Black students made up 24% of overall enrollment at HBCUs.
